Julius Lansburgh | COMBINATION 315 Seventh Street.

Baron Rothschild once said to a young man: "I'll do better than lend you the 10,000 francs you want. Give me your arm," and linking it within his own he walked with him down the Bois de Boulogne. The Paris bankers took the cue and the man became rich.

Does not a similar association with a genteel dress imply a status that gives credit and stability? Other things being equal we will clothe a man, not extravagantly, but with gentility so plainly stamped that he'll have a large margin of advantage. Next to "Who's your banker?" men will ask "Who's your clothier?"
